4. How much do you typically spend on groceries?

5. How much time do you usually spend grocery shopping each week?

6. Walk me through your most recent grocery or household-essentials shopping trip. Where did you shop, how did you get there, and were you buying for yourself or others?

7. How do you decide which products and package sizes to buy? Has package size ever made you choose something else? Tell me about the last time.

8. What do you currently do to reduce the cost of these purchases? What works well, and what does not?

9. Which everyday products have you bought repeatedly over the past month? How long does each purchase usually last?

Part 2: Bulk Buying

2. What kinds of items do you typically buy in bulk?

3. What are the main reasons you choose to buy certain items in bulk?

5. Are there items you would like to buy in bulk but currently don't? Why?

Part 3: Sharing Purchases

2. If you shop together, do you pay together or separately?

3. How did you work out everyone's quantities, payments, and collection? What was easy or difficult?

4. Would you bulk buy with strangers from your community, or strictly people you know?

5. If a stranger offered to bulk buy for you and a group of people, then meet somewhere familiar and nearby to hand over your items (e.g. UVic), would you accept?

Part 4: Organizer Experience
Ask potential organizers (or anyone who has organized a group purchase).
1. Walk me through the last time you bought or ordered something for a group.

2. Which parts took the most time? Roughly how much time did each take?

3. What did you use to track requests and payments? What worked well enough that you would keep it?

4. Did anything change after people committed (quantities, prices, availability, collection plans)? How did you handle it?

5. How were your time, transport, and other costs covered? What made doing it worthwhile, or not worthwhile?

6. Would you ever step up to bulk buy for people? Friends only, or even strangers nearby?

7. If no, do you even have the means to bulk buy for yourself and others? If yes, how many people at most?
